

ULC Mark Product Certification

To establish certification, samples of a product submitted by manufacturers for certification are tested and evaluated. If ULC decides the product fulfills all applicable requirements it authorizes the manufacturer to apply a certification mark to production of the samples submitted, or issues a certificate or notification that the product is now certified by ULC. A report of the evaluation is provided to the manufacturer. Before the manufacturer releases products with a certification mark, ULC must initiate Follow-up Service in which periodic audits of products at the factory are completed by ULC Field Representatives. These audits are described in a Follow-Up Service Procedure that is created as part of the initial evaluation of the product. For some products, factory samples are selected for retesting at ULC. Certification continues until the manufacturer requests termination or fails to fulfill a requirement. ULC must evaluate modifications to certified products before the modified product is authorized to bear the Mark or be considered certified.
